

Medical research at universities has a major impact on people's health around the world.

How can we ensure that universities do the research that is most desperately needed?

How can we ensure that people in poor countries have access to the fruits of that research?

Universities Allied for Essential Medicines (UAEM) is a student group that tackles these issues through hands-on advocacy. We have already had a lot of success at UBC and other universities, but there is a lot of work left to do, and we need your help!

Want to learn more?

UAEM Introductory Seminar
Saturday, October 13th, 2007
9:30am – 2:00pm

Where: Medical Student Alumni Centre, 2750 Heather St. (at 12th Ave)

Food: tea and cookies provided – bring your own lunch and mug

RSVP: ubc.uaem@gmail.com

Please join us for this comprehensive introduction to crucial global health topics such as drug development, patenting, and access to treatment – whether you'd like to get involved, or just learn about these important issues!

About UAEM

- UAEM is a hands-on student organization that focuses on changing university policies in order to increase access to medical treatments in developing countries.
- There are chapters at over 40 universities across North America.
- We are an interdisciplinary group, including undergraduates, medical and law students, as well as graduate students in basic science, public health, international health, business, and many other disciplines. All are welcome!

